Here are just a few of the highlights on tap this week. More info on these—and the full slate—is in the Tribeca calendar of events.

As for ongoing events, you might consider... Emily Roysdon's "Positions" show at Art in General is her first solo exhibit in New York: "Positions presents a series of three works that are defined by a short-term and improvisational working method with a focus on developing and articulating a vocabulary of movement while applying gesture to shifting concepts of site. Created specifically for her exhibition at Art in General, Roysdon produced three large silkscreened rectangular panels that lean—using the room as armature and exploring the weight of an image. Positions, for which the exhibition is titled, explores the intersection between figure and ground, the logic of the grid, and the repetition and accumulation of ungrounded figures."
